BAGHDAD (Reuters) diplomatic relations with Egypt on Friday. The official Iraqi News Agency said Baghdad had restored links severed after Egypt signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

Iraq was the second country to renew relations with Egypt in a week. The United Arab Emirates resumed links with Cairo after Arab leaders meeting in Jordan decided to leave up to individual countries the option of restoring ties. The group had earlier failed to reach agreement on Egypt's readmission to the 21-member Arab League.

Carlucci Advocates A Smaller Military

Carineci, the national security adviser, has distanced himself from some of Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger's policies, saying he would recommend canceling weap-ons programs and building a smaller U.S. military force if confirmed as Mr. Weinberger's successor.

Mr. Carlucci, who was recom-mended for confirmation Friday by the Senate Armed Services Committee, did not specify which programs or forces he would cut in the Pentagon's budget crunch. However, in his testimony, Mr.

• Emphasized his opposition to any withdrawal of U.S. troops from Western Europe. • Was less fervent than Mr. Weinberger in his defense of President Ronald Reagan's space-based Strategic Defense Initiative.

 Indicated he would support the pending U.S.-Soviet treaty to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear forces, during Senate ratification hearings next year, against conservative opposition.

• Said arguments for the "nar-row" and "broad" interpretations of the anti-ballistic missile treaty of 1972 were "ambiguous." He offered to make decisions about tests of missile defenses in consultation with Congress.

Committee members praised Mr. Carlucci's cooperative tone, which contrasted with Mr. Weinberger's sometimes confrontational style.

The panel voted, 18-0, Friday to recommend Senate approval of Mr. Carlucci Senator Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia and chairman of the committee, said he hoped for a Senate vote next week. Reagan's New Reality: Learning to Compromise

By Steven V. Roberts New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - By nominating Judge Anthony M. Kennedy to fill the Supreme Court vacancy and making significant concessions in talks on reducing the deficit, President Ronald Reagan has agreed to compromise some of the basic goals and precepts he set for the final two years of his administration.

After months of defiance and confrontation, Mr. Reagan seems to be acknowledging the results of the 1986 elections, which returned control of the Senate to the Dem-least six months, "and maybe longer than that," to accept the consequences of the election last year. But now, he added, Mr. Reagan and his advisers understand that "it's damn tough to get things done when you have a Democratic Senate."

Senator Ted Stevens, Republican of Alaska, said: "I've been thinking, When is someone down there in the White House going to realize we don't have the votes?' I realized it the first time I couldn't get something out of my committee, but it took In effect, the country is now being ruled by something like a coalition government, in which power is shared by a Democratic Congress and a Republican president. As a result, said Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato, Republican of New York, "neither side can have its total point of view." One symbol of that coalition was visible on Wednesday, when the president met with Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr., Democrat of Delaware, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. That meeting, also attended by Senator Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the ranking Republican on the panel, signaled that the White House saw the need for "early and intense consultations" with congressional Democrats on Judge Kennedy's nomination, Mr. Fitzwater said.

A day earlier, in announcing his selec-tion of Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Reagan stressed the need for "a spirit of cooperation and bipartisanship" in the confirmation process, a striking contrast to the highly partisan tone he has often taken in discussing Supreme Court nominations.

In a rare moment of contrition, Mr. Reagan added, The experience of the last several months has made all of us a bit

For Street Artists, Berlin Wall Is 100-Mile Canvas

By Serge Schmemann New York Times Service BERLIN — The Berlin Wall,

Peter Unsicker says, is the only really German art since the war. "It's built by Germans in the East, painted by Germans in the West," he explained, not without a tinge of Berliner Schnauze, the cheek on which Berliners used to pride them-

But Mr. Unsicker cannot be accused of treating the wall, or his art, lightly. His West Berlin studio, in a run-down old building still riddled with the pockmarks of war, faces directly onto the wall, about 16 feet (four meters) away.

He calls it the Wall Street Gallery, and it is currently filled by a large log structure named the Trojan Horse.

Like most of the 40-year-old sculptor's works, the Trojan Horse is meant to plumb ambienities and questions raised by the wall. The horse's head, for example, can be faced either way and the wall can be viewed through either end, an effect intended to raise what the artist's calling card terms "the daily question - do I stand before or behind the wall?"

"You can't live here and not be tied to the wall," he said.

"It's not that I'm for it or against it — I'm totally con-fronted by it."

The wall is, first of all, a graffitist's dream, a smooth, almost unbroken surface 131/2 feet high and about 100 miles (160 kilometers) long, extending well be-yond the boundaries of Berlin proper, Then, too, it reduces so much politics, ideology, passion and struggle to a statement almost banal in its simplicity and directness.

It mocks the grand preten-sions of the system behind it, the utopia whose citizens must be corralled behind reinforced concrete. It puts a literal barrier to the reunification of the defeated nation it divides, it draws a tangible line between East and West.

Yet, for all its dogs, watchtowers, barbed wire and concrete, the wall can seem almost playfully absurd at times, zigzagging through back alleys or across canals, or hugging both sides of a street to loop a tiny enclave of 17 houses, as it does around the Steinstücken neighhorhood. This is not, after all, a gash ripped through the city by an imperious potentate, but the end product of finicky Allied See WALL, Page 2

Country of 140 million people.
Once booming growth has been crippled by inflation, debt and reduced real wages. Opinion polls show that the public blames both Mr. Sarney and the political parties, with which he is at odds. But Mr. Sarney is more vulnerable.

'Sarney's loss of leadership has reached a point of no return," said a private industry lobbyist, who is trying to influence the vote of legislators assembled here to write a new constitution for Brazil.

"Sarney is a traitor," said Fernando Lyra, Mr. Sarney's former minister of justice and now a mem-ber of the Constitutional Assembly that is preparing the draft constitu-tion. When he took office he agreed to a four-year term, but now he wants five." Mr. Sarney's future - and Bra-

"As soon as possible after the new constitution is promulgated. we have to have a vote for a new president," said Antonio Ermirio de Morães, a powerful industrial leader, in a keynote speech that drew cheers from a gathering of 400 private businessmen here last week.

"No economy can be set right when the government insists on disorganizing the market, and that is the case in Brazil" said Mr. de Morães, whose companies make aluminum and cement.

He took office declaring that the first priority of his government would be to cut spending and reduce inflation. But deficits have soared, despite higher taxes, increased government borrowing, and forced "loans" from business and the middle class on automo-biles, gasoline and air travel. This has antagonized the political right. The problems Mr. Samey now faces include:

• A deep split in the two-party coalition that brought Mr. Neves and Mr. Samey to power in 1985. The president controls neither the Democratic Movement Party nor the smaller partner in the govern-ment coalition, the Liberal Front Party. The parties have fought over government jobs. Consequently, Mr. Sarney's government lacks authority and credibility.

• A worsening economic crisis. Resurgent inflation has broken through a system of price controls. Prices last month rose 11 percent The annual rate of inflation is more than 300 percent now. Pro-Smoking Drive Gains Force

Washington Accused of Aiding Marketing Effort Abroad

By Fred Hiatt

Washington Post Service
TOKYO — U.S. tobacco companies, faced with a shrinking market at home, are rapidly recruiting new smokers in Asia and the developing world, often with the aid of the U.S. government, according to delegates to an anti-smoking conference here.

The percentage of people who smoke in the industrialized world has steadily declined in recent years, health experts at the conference noted Thursday, but the proportion of smokers in developing countries is rising. The experts charged that tobacco companies had particularly targeted youth and women, who traditionally have not smoked in many Asian countries.

"The industry plan is to create demand among Oriental females," said Gregory N. Connolly, an ad-viser to the World Health Organization. "If you have one billion Oriental females who don't smoke as a market, that would more than replace the quitters in Western Eutope and North America." He added: "And death and disease will follow." Only 14 percent of Japanese women smoke. But more young women are smoking since U.S. pressure forced Japan to import U.S. brands, triggering an advertising war between U.S. and Japanese manufacturers, said an organizer of the conference, Dr. Tadao Shimao, former director of the Japan Anti-Tuberculosis Foundation.

Several delegates said U.S. officials, in their zeal to open Asian markets to U.S. tobacco companies, had interfered with local gov-ernment health measures. They gave as examples:

 Last year Hong Kong an-nounced that it would become the first place in Asia to ban snuff and chewing tobacco. Flaine L. Chung. deputy secretary for health and welfare, said U.S. Tobacco Co., maker of Skol and other chewing tobaccos, lobbied hard against the ban, and a trade official of the U.S. Consulate called her to complain about the proposal.

• In Taiwan, when the U.S. government pressured Taipei to allow U.S. cigarettes to be imported, officials also urged Taiwan to end its ban on cigarette advertising, arguneeded to advertise. David D. Yen, businessman and chairman of a health foundation, said Taiwan held firm on television advertising but agreed to allow magazine ads.

In South Korea and Japan, U.S. officials lobbied hard for lower prices for imported cigarettes. When the Japanese Health Ministry formed a committee to study measures to reduce smoking, the U.S. Embassy said in a message to the State Department that the contmittee "poses the danger that, intentionally or not, action which might discriminate against foreign cigarettes might be recommended

Welcome Unity in Amman

The communique of the Arab summit meeting in Amman, Jordan, is astonishing: It thunders at Iran in tones once reserved for Israel. It calls for an international peace conference, in which Arab participants would have to deal with Israel, and leaves the door open for its members to renew ties with Egypt. Perhaps of greatest significance, Syria -enemy of Israel and Egypt and ally of Iran and the Soviet Union — has signed on.

Now it is up to the new Arab coalition of non-radicals and Syria to hold together and follow through. A message of moderation will not be lost in Israeli politics. A united Arab front talking tough about Iran can also have its effect on Tehran's mullahs.

Twenty-one Arab states "voiced their indignation at the Iranian regime's intransigence, provocations, and threats ... con-demned Iran's occupation of part of Iraq ... led to the international community to shoulder its responsibilities . . . confirmed its solidarity and support to Iraq ... declared its solidarity with Kuwait ... denounced the bloody criminal acts perpetrated by the Iranians in the vicinity of Holy Mosque."

Probe deeper, and it looks as if some shrewd inter-Arab diplomacy has stretched a fragile consensus to the limit. The big catch for King Hussein of Jordan was the support of Syria, the only influential Arab state to befriend Iran. But President Hafez al-Assad won two vital concessions: the declaration did not call on Arab states to sever relations with Iran, and Egypt was not invited to rejoin the Arab League. In deference to Mr. Assad, member states will decide individually about renewing ties broken in 1979 to protest Egypt's peace accord with Israel.

Hence, Syria can continue its game of coaxing essential subsidies from Saudi Ara-bia while simultaneously obtaining oil aid from Iran. Still, what looks like a crafty bargain in Amman may seem more like a betrayal in Tehran. This summit meeting was dominated by Jordan and Saudi Arabia. Israel was only routinely condemned and somehow the English version of the communiqué failed to anoint the PLO as sole spokesman for the Palestinian people.

Iran's behavior has so united and outraged Arab sentiments that Syria had to join in the denunciation. The summit meeting drew Iraq closer to its moderate allies, especially a no longer outcast Egypt, which provides it with $1 billion a year in aid. The declaration makes it harder for Moscow to resist an arms embargo on Iran for not accepting a United Nations cease-fire. It expresses an entire region's judgment on prolonging slaughter ordained by the angry old men who rule Iran.

That this rebuke to zealouv comes from the Arab League could itself become a rebuke to old cliches - if Syria does not revert to its old and nasty games.

Dole Makes It Official

In his home town of Russell, Kansas, Bob Dole announced this week that he is running for president. Senator Dole is (by about a year) the oldest candidate in the race and the most experienced in national politics. After spending 39 months in the hospital recover-ing from grievous wounds suffered in World War II, he moved rapidly upward in politics. He has served in Congress during the Kenne-dy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter and Reagan presidencies. In the minority, Mr. Dole was an acerbic critic of the Democrats but also a constructive legislator on farm bills and food stamps. When he unexpectedly became Senate finance chairman in 1981 and majority leader in 1985, he showed great legislative skills and a steely determination to attack problems he thought needed attacking. Most candidates running this year are little known, and the burden of proof is on them to show they deserve serious consideration. Rob Dole has already met that burden. He does have his drawbacks. In years past, in contrast to his current reputation as one who can work with Democrats on Canitol Hill and who favors the politics of accommodation leading to action, Mr. Dole was famous for the bitterness of his partisan instincts. Running for vice president in 1976, his wit turned corrosively nasty; now and "those who've been left behind, those who've never found the ladder of success.'

This theme is a prominent one in his campaign. (In the recent Republican debate in Houston, he, alone, stressed it.) Senator Dole is undeniably an able legislator, but some fear he is too much of a one-man operator, concentrating on short-term legis lative tactics rather than a long-term strategy for governing. Can he run a big-staff operation like the presidency, and does he have a broad view of society and government that can help him make tough decisions in the hurly-burly of daily events?

The campaign should give some hints. Mr. Dole begins with support comparable to George Bush's, and in some early contests the Iowa cancuses Feb. 8 and the South Dakota primary Feb. 23 --- his long record on farm programs will be an asset. Nationally, he will argue that he will bring "practical solutions and tested experience," as his television ad puts it, to the Oval Office, that he will provide "strong leadership" at a time when the old rules in economics and foreign policy no longer seem to apply. It is a weighty argument. Just how weighty, Republican voters will be telling us in a few months.

But demoacquaintance: we are Sherri, fourth viscountess of Falls Church." There is an alternative, however, and that is simply to slip into your next introduction to someone the five digits of the Zip Code you use in addressing letters. For those numbers, far more than the names of places, are coming to be the indicators of status in America.

We were reminded of this the other day by an item in The Post concerning a magazine on architecture. In its early days, the magazine was distributed free to certain Zip Code areas in Manhattan that met its high standards for income, education and other socioeconomic indicators. Then it expanded to similarly blessed Zips in other parts of

In the old societies of Europe, it has long been common (if that is the right word) for to people outside those precincts, but they to people outside those precincts, but they must pay $80 for nine issues, and even so will probably be ashamed to put their Zip Codes on their letters to the editor.

A Zip Code may not have the same ring of these, and is worth a small fiefdom to the mail-order merchant seeking the sort of households that will pay $45 a pound for a shipment of smoked salmon.

So when the postman rings at an American's door, hands him a free publication on architecture, and says, "Your magazine, my liege," then he will know he has arrived. Henceforth, he may count himself a member of the aristocracy of Zip, entitled to be announced at soirces as "lord of certain lands possibly exceeding one-fourth of an acre and of residential properties under chattel mortgage within the postal domain of 20093 the honorable Mr. or Ms. Occupant."

The removal of Boris Yeltsin as head of the Moscow City Communist Party confirms the most pessimistic of predictions about the Gorbachev leadership. Whatever the rights and wrongs of the affair, the manner of Mr. Yeltsin's going discredits glasnost. Certainly, Mr. Yeltsin was outspoken, perhaps ill-advisedly so. But Mr. Gorbachev surely knew that in advance. The Soviet leader has been revealed as a manager of change rather than the revolutionary many had hoped for.

Fighting African Stereotypes

The "witch" Alice Lakwena and her Holy Spirit rebels in Uganda have brought a parcel of stereotypes on African magic and sorcery to the surface in the mass media. The hard core of this opinion can be summed up thus: Africa is dominated by magic and witchcraft - ancestral practices still alive in the modern world.

There are two approaches to this. For —J.P. Olivier de Sardan, an anthropologist, "modernists" like the Ugandan president, writing in Libération (Paris).

the eradication of traditional "superstition." For Westerners in search of "noble savages." or educated Africans looking for their roots, these practices are a precious heritage. In fact, these African phenomena deserve neither an excess of respect nor of indignity.

Movements like the Holy Spirit rebels are. in strictly religious terms, anything but tradi-tional. They mix traditional and imported elements (generally derived from missionary Christianity). And African magical-religious practices should not be lumped together as primitive." What observer would dare conuse Protestantism and Catholicism?

[The Holy Spirit movement can be compared to] other religious movements, from the Mau-Mau in Kenya to the Mahdist sect re-spousible for rioting in Kano, Nigeria, a few years ago. The importance of the social protest and political revolt of these movements is clear. One cannot reduce the march of thousands of men and women, holding off a regular army, to a question of manipulation of superstitious souls by embittered politicisms.

A Nation Grapples With Its Stalinist Legacy

By Roy Medvedev

This was written last month, before Mikhail Gorbachev delivered his Nov. 2 speech criticizing Stalinism. Mr. Medvedev is a dissident Soviet historian whose works have appeared regularly in the West.

OSCOW - As recently as last year, con-M demnations of Stalin or Stalinism were found more frequently in hints and indirect form than in straight talk.

A decisive turn only began in January 1987 when Tengiz Abuladze's film "Repentance" came to our country's screens. Employing methods of realism, surrealism, the grotesque, the absurd and satire, the film deals Stalinism, and tyranny in general, a blow of great emotional force.

Between April and June of this year, the journal Druzhba Narodov published Anatoli Rybakov's novel "Children of the Arbat," which became not only the literary event of the year but an event in the country's public political life. For the first time in Soviet literature. Stalin appears not just as an episodic figure but as the central character of a novel. Mr. Rybakov paints a very accurate psychological and historical picture of Stalin in 1933 and 1934, when he was already plotting a series of crafty provocations to destroy all potential opponents, create a new ruling apparatus and consoli-date the totalitarian power of the "leader."

The offensive against Stalinism begun in novels, poems and films continued through this summer and fall in scores of articles, in reviews and in hundreds of letters from readers. Many associate the current criticism of Stalin with the anti-Stalin campaign of 1961 to 1964. There are similarities, but also one critical difference.

In the early 1960s, the artistic intelligentsia was not yet entirely ready to support Khrushchev, And the party apparatus was clearly sabotaging the [anti-Stalinist] decisions of the 22d party congress held in 1961. But today's anti-Stalinist campaign is proceeding on a broader front and undoubtedly has the support not only of Mikhail Gorbachev but other influential members of the Politburo and the Central Committee.

Many of the same questions are being raised that were examined in the late 1950s and early 1960s: the terror of 1937-1938, the extermination of the commanding officers of the Red Army, Stalin's mistaken assessment of Hitler's plans in 1941 and defeats in the first years of the war, the atmosphere of terror, mistrust and suspicion propagated by the "Father of the Peoples" and Stalin's ruinous meddling in the social and natural sciences. Once again we can read lengthy essays about major figures of the party and government who fell victim to Stalin's arbitrary rule.

But by early this year, issues arose that got too little attention in the 1960s. These include the expediency of Stalin's agrarian policies in 1927 and 1928, his renunciation of Lenin's New Economic Policy and his policy of collectivization and liquidation of the kulaks. V. Belov in his novel "The Last Days" and B. Mozhaev in "Peasant Men and Peasant Women" show the senseless destruction of productive forces in the countryside, the annihilation of the more productive farms, the growth of poverty and arbitrary rule, and the mass ruin and starvation of the peasantry.

Today we can also read appraisals of Stalin by his published memoirs ("Stalin was terrifying People were in horror of going to see him.") There has been wide public response to the campaign, begun by Izvestia, to end lingering suspicions about the fate of millions of Soviet soldiers missing or taken prisoner in World War II. Strange as it may seem to foreign readers, millions of people who fell on the battlefields or who died in captivity beyond Soviet borders are not counted in the official figures of Soviet losses.

The anti-Stalin campaign of recent months is gathering in breadth, depth and intensity, as did the campaign of the 1960s. But the public response to criticism of Stalin's crimes today is not so resonant as it was 25 or 30 years ago. This is understandable. Most people who survived Stato culture have already departed this life. For Soviet citizens in their 20s, 30s and 40s, "the Stalin Era" represents only history.

Tens of millions of people whose political outlook was formed in the last 20 years know nothing of Stalin's crimes. One should not be surprised that many young people walk out on the movie "Repentance." They do not under-stand the film. They lack the essential historical and aesthetic culture. This explains, I think, the fact that resistance to the new criticism of Stalinism is not so considerable as it was in the early 1960s or after the 20th party congress in 1956.

But there is resistance. Nearly every recent major anti-Stalinist work saw the light of day only after a complicated behind-the-scenes fight in which even members of the Politburo had to intercede. The letters streaming into newspaper and magazine offices contain many that maliciously attack anti-Stalin materials and sometimes even threaten their authors.

Your articles do damage to society, destroy peoples' belief and outlook as citizens," writes K. Kulyamova to the editors of Sovetskaya Kultura. "You deprive them of patriotism and pride in their socialist ideals. Don't you have other problems to address besides airing dirty laundry?" It must be said that the recent groundswell against Stalinism was unexpected for the social sciences and particularly for history and historians. Few noted historians have supported the fight against Stalinism. But these historians were not able to publish their thoughts in professional historical or social-science journals. Confusion reigns among university and secondary-school teachers. All existing textbooks on Soviet history are inappropriate for students, as the noted pedagogne V. Svirsky shows con-vincingly in his article "History Keeps Silent." These texts not only keep silent on many impor-tant events of our history, they often falsify them.

The major book on the history of the U.S.R.,
"Soviet Russia: 1917-1987," which appeared in bookstores this spring, is astonishingly primitive, although practically every leading historian con-tributed to it. Now, not only the names of Khrushehev and Stalin but of Brezhnev and Chernenko have disappeared from history. Those most often mentioned are Lenin and Gorbachev

Of course, the new criticism of Stalin and Stalinism has still not gone deep enough. Many "taboos" and "blank spots" remain. But there are many indications that this criticism will not be hastily derailed, but rather that it will widen and deepen. This prospect frightens bureaucrats and demagogues but pleases the majority of honest people in the Soviet Union.

On one level this is surprising. The government is widely seen as commit and unpopular. It has played fast and loose with democracy, blatantly tampering with election results last year. But the government is unlikely to fall. It is liberal enough to diffuse violent protest — newspapers can re-port on opposition statements and raiies - yet it is ruthless enough to deal harshly with protests, jailing 1,000 opposition activists in the weeks before the "siege." And, of course, General Ershad has the army on his side. Bangladesh has been bathed in blood before, first with the creation of Pakistan in 1947 and then in 1971, when East Pakistan broke away to form the Bengali state of Bangladesh. Since then two of its rulers have been assassinated by the army (Sheikh Hasina's father and Mrs. Zia's husband). There is deep fear at the thought of another bloodbath. Yet Sheikh Hasina is frank about what might happen if she came to power: The people must punish Ershad," she said in a recent interview (she and Mrs. Zia since were placed under house arrest). Pressed as to whether she would let General Ershad leave the country to avoid retribution, she was blunt: "No, I can't go against the peoples' sentiment." Such inflammatory talk does not go down well in today's Bangladesh. Perhaps the two women would make more progress if they had a convincing program beyond the "Er-shad must go" rhetoric. Neither makes more than general observations on the economy, Asia's poorest. Both seem to see nationalizations of industry as an answer to the lack of competitiveness. And General Ershad does have some virtues: He mounted a successful these people believe that what his relief operation this summer when Bangladesh was hit by the worst floods in memory. Parts of the country, through which flow the mighty Ganges and the Brahmaputra, are still underwater. Thousands of people had to climb trees or take to makeshift boats. Yet only 700 died, far fewer than the thousands killed by less severe floods in 1974. Relief was provided quickly, and the army built up embankments and diverted floodwaters.

And there is evidence that General Ershad has got the economy moving.

when allowance is made for Bangladesh's rapid population growth. Unlike Pakistan and India, Bangladesh is still 10 to 15 years away from being able to feed itself, but it is moving in that direction, with the help of imaginative development programs in the countryside.

What the country needs now is political stability. Events like the siege of Dhaka scare off investors. General Ershad's job, if he is to leave a lasting legacy, must be to establish democracy and eliminate corruption.

The danger is that if he comes through the recent events unscathed, he will be lulled into carrying on as before. Bangladesh then may continue as Asia's poor relation - a tragic destiny for a country that could escape the straits of poverty if only its politicians were more farsighted.

The Arabs' 'New Birth' Deserves Support

AINT signs of unity have emerged from the Arab League summit meeting in Amman, Jordan. A warning: These may last as long as a cease-fire in Beirut. Or they may be something the Arab world can build upon to form a more coherent and stable bloc in a highly volatile region.

The unifying element was the threat posed by the aggressive policies of Iran. But the Arabs were also looking for a means eventually to get foreign navies out of the Gulf. For now, they are happy to have the protection. But they are not prepared for a permanent presence.

What should be the U.S. administration's attitude toward this develop-

The Arab governments that have banded together against the Khomeini regime clearly are not American puppets. There are grave differences between their governments and Washington on any number of questions. But they are strongly opposed, admittedly for different reasons, to the religious fanatics who rule in Tehran.

Second, and perhaps equally important, America should listen sympathetically when, if all goes well, the Arabs agitate for the removal of American and other Western warships from the Gulf. In view of the strategic and financial expenses involved, removal should be welcomed.

Finally, it might be well to remember the words of King Hussein of Jordan when he announced the results of the meeting: "What we have achieved, with God's blessing, is a new birth. Like all newborns it needs commitment, care and continuous effort so that it can gain nis Lacorne concludes that this all rested on an illusion: that the United States had shown the way (the writer uses English) "to have our cake and eat it too." America, under Mr. Reagan, was thought to have proved that this could be done.

The abrupt collapse of Reaganomics in the past few weeks thus has had a considerable impact in Western Europe. But there is more to the story than markets and economics. Laissez-faire has always been held in some suspicion in Europe. It was condemned by the left, certainly, but it was also regarded with reserve by traditional Tories in Britain, con-West Germans. He said diffusion of vital technologies throughout the economy was opening additional markets for Australia's manufactured exports and forming the basis of a competitive manufacturing industry that had until recently been sheltered by import barriers.

Bucharuddin Jusuf Habibic, minister of state for research and technology in Indonesia, said his country was harnessing technology to modernize an economy based on natural resources. The normal path for a develop-

Envoy Says Vatican and China Move Toward Ties

BELIING -China and the Vatican are moving toward restoring relations severed by China 30 years ago, Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, the archbishop of Manila, said Friday after meeting Chinese religious and Communist Party leaders. "My first visit three years ago was very rough, like plowing a field which is very stony," the cardinal said in a telephone interview. Now it is very fertile. I think we will come to an agreement. It's a question of good will."

Cardinal Sin, who came to China with the blessing of Pope John Paul II, met with Zhao Ziyang, the Communist Party leader, for more than an hour Wednesday. It was the highest-level meeting between the Roman Catholic Church and Beijing since ties were cut in 1957.
The cardinal quoted Mr. Zhao as saying that the main obstacle to restoring relations was the Vatican's diplomatic recognition of the Nationalist government in Taiwan.

"I think that issue is no longer a problem," the cardinal said. "There is only one China. Zhao is very understanding. He has a beautiful vision of the future."

China's Catholics, who number several million, suffered wide-spread persecution during the 1950s and during the Cultural Revolution of 1966 to 1976.

All churches were closed and some were destroyed. Many priests died, and others are believed to be still in prison. The cardinal said he had asked Chinese officials to be allowed to visit imprisoned Catholics but was refused permission. He said he specifically had raised the case of Bishop Joseph Fan Xuevan, 79, who was imprisoned in 1984 for 10 years. He was accused of ordaining priests in secret. Cardinal Sin was to fly Friday to Xian and then to Shanghai on Sunday. He said he hoped to meet in Shanghai with Bishop Ignatius Gong Pinmei, who was freed in 1985 after 30 years in prison.

WHAT IS LOTTO 6/49?

Lotto 6/49 is the official Canadian version of Lotto—the world's most popular form of lottery. It's the lottery in which you pick your own numbers and it's called "6/49" because you select any 6 of 49 possible numbers from 1 to 49. Your numbers are entered in the Lotto 6/49 computer system and if they match the six winning numbers chosen in the draw-you win the grand prize. Or if you have only 3, 4 or 5 numbers correct you win one of thousands of secondary prizes available.

HOW CAN I PLAY?

Complete the attached order form and send it to Canadian Overseas Marketing along with the necessary payment. We will enter your numbers for the specified length of your subscription. You may select from 1 to 6 games for 10, 26, or 52 weeks. Each game gives you another chance at the grand prize for every draw in which you are entered. You receive a "Confirmation of Entry" by return mail acknowledging your order and indicating the numbers you have selected as well as the draws in which they are entered.

HOW DO I KNOW WHEN I WIN? You will be notified immediately when you win a prize of $1,000.00 or more. Also, a complete list of all winning numbers will be sent to you after every tenth draw so that you can check along the way to see how you are doing. At the expiration of your subscription you will be sent a final statement of your winnings. GENEVA—There seems to be an infinite number of ways of presenting "The Magic Flute," multiple methods of combining its lofty symbolism, popular comedy effect at all levels of Mozart's music. The new production at the Grand Théâtre manages to cram several attitudes into one place decorative, didactic, dialectic, ironic, farcical — and present the whole in a musical package marvelously shaped by Jeffrey Tate.

Perhaps the temptation is to read too much into Benno Besson's staging. Besson, venturing into opera after a cosmopolitan career that has ranged from close association with Bertolt Brecht in East Berlin to present directorship of the Co-médie de Genève, can be connted on to get a lot from a text — even one as maligned as Schikaneder's. Not only was most of the spoken text employed —eminently reasonable for the multilingual Geneva public - but it was delivered with an elaborately disingenuous straightness, accompanied by detailed comic mime, which elicited response — and laughter — on more than one level.

Take the first encounter of Tamino and Papageno, neither one of which has a clue that another world exists than his own. "Who am !?" says Papageno. "What a dumb question. A man like you." Tamino knows better, but not much. "My father is king . . . so I am called prince." This last was delivered by Jerry Hadley with a round-faced guilelessness comic in itself, a living contradiction to the assurance of the words, and at the same time the tip of an unsoundable social-politi-

Or take Sarastro and his court, all of them not only businesslike and brusque in manner, but mugging and miming. Tschamdressed in contemporary business suits easily visible under the robes of their carrious order. Sarastro was solidly seconded by Alfred Muff's sonorously of their curious order. Sarastro may be blessed with the only music ever certing when it comes instead from smoothly though the coloratura the president of the local Rotary hurdles while coping with the idio- which under Hugues Gall's direc-

Jean-Marc Stehlé's sets and costumes and Jean-Jacques Bouhon's lighting had much to do with the production's charm, much of it reminiscent of Maurice Sendak country. Lush tropical vegetation inhabited by congenial lions and other animals, occasionally parted to reveal the crumbling temples of wisdom, reason and nature. The visual effects of the trials by fire and water were more convincing than the usual fraternity inititiation

The costumes postulated three levels of society. Papageno, Papaquasi animai world, birdlike or simian according to need; Tamino and Pamina (garbed demurely in baggy black pantaloons and a secthrough top) at first inhabited a kind of comic-strip world, then grew into a nobler status, while Sarastro and his cronies presented their bourgeois version of an exalt-

Tate and the Lausanne Chambe Orchestra provided a consistently satisfying musical floor for this production. The conductor continues to reaffirm his rapid rise in opera pits of the world with a reading of unfailing lyric flow and with phrasing that was without eccentricity, at once natural and exalted. Mozartians of this stamp do not grow on trees.

Hadley's attractive lyric tenor was more suitable to the early, more comic, stages of his character development than to Tamino's eventual heroic status, and he was well matched by Barbara Bonney's bright-voiced, girl-next-door Pa-mina. Petteri Salomaa was a very light-voiced Papageno, but with a stand-up comic's sense of foolish pompous Speaker. Plucked from Mannheim at the last moment to replace an ailing Queen of the Night, Claudia Kunz sailed

Jerry Hadley and Barbara Bonney as Tamino and Pamina.

Art Market Remains Fragile Despite Spending Spree

cent van Gogh's much celebrated "Irises," which sold for $53.9 million. But, most significantly, Sotheby's sale confirmed the two trends that came out strongly in this week's sales. The art market is displaying extraordinary vigor despite the ongoing stock crisis. At the same time there is a massive redistribution of parts in the cast: The United States is receding fast as the Japanese and the Europeans compete for the first place.

It was Tuesday night at Chris-tie's that professionals found out that the market was builish against all odds. Christopher Burge, Christie's president, who was taking the sale in person, says that he knew that this sale would go well the minute two paddles went up simultaneously as Lot 2, a Renoir portrait, appeared on the turntable. Barton Howard Jenks turned threequarters left in formal attire, Painted in 1865, it is of interest to American antiquarians — Jenks invented a new type of gun that he tried to sell to the French government. It is of even greater interest in terms of art history. The portrait illustrates enced by Manet. Because this is not an Impressionist painting, howev-er, professionals hardly expected it to sell. It did reasonably well at

Other apparent non-starters did better still, much to the surprise of dealers sitting around me. A snowy landscape by Renoir, also painted in pre-Impressionist days, went up to $242,000; a very clumsy Degas view of two horses in a pasture sold for $220,000, and a Fantin-Latour picture of a vase filled with flowers, showing signs of wear, made

As Christie's sale, briskly conducted by Burge, who was at the peak of his form, gathered momentum, the Japanese entered the game. They turned the sale into a collection in 1911.

Characteristically the Japanese acquired works that almost certainly would have gone to Americans last May. Such is Monet's mauve, green and blue landscape of 1885, "Prin-temps, bord de l'Epte" which was in Albert Spencer's collection in New York around 1891 and entered the great Harris Whittemore

The cent, and the Japanese, 27 percent, picture was painted in 1888. Its still a huge percentage for a single history can be followed from the country. In the afternoon, the Japamoment the Galerie Durand-Ruel, which handled the Impressionists, bought it from Renoir on Jan. 28, 1891, for 500 gold francs and sold it their interest now extends to the to W.I. Cook of New York on entire market range, not just the March 19, 1892, for $1,000. Durand-Ruel bought it back via his New York branch in 1910 for an undisclosed amount. On Dec. 12, 1912, Mrs. Nelson Robinson got it : The stage was set for Sotheby's for $14,500. It went through two evening session, which confirmed more New York collections before the pattern established at Chrisbeing displayed at the Metropolisuo corporation in Yokohama, for $5,280,000. Equally striking is the departure for Japan of Monet's "Nympheas," sold by order of the board of trustees of the Art Institute of Chicago for $3.3 million. For the first time, the Japanese departed from their traditional borders on abstraction and has intense contrasted colors with black delineations that usually appeal most to collectors from the Germanic cultural sphere. The picture was in Chicago collections for a long time and would most probably have stayed in America had it been sold in May. By the end of the day, the Japanese had spent $18.1 mil-lion, 48 percent in value of Christie's $37.5 million sale against 25 percent by the Americans who trailed the Europeans' 27 per cent.

'30s Mistakes Are Obvious, But a Solution for Today?

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service OLOGNA — After a week of intense discussions here among leading European and American economists and politicians, an agenda can be constructed of critical problems that must be solved if the stock market collapse is to be prevented from becoming a greater catastrophe.

The biggest worry is whether the world's financial structure can withstand further and even greater shocks. Harold van Buren Cleveland, a consulting economist and former senior economist at Citibank, said that his concern was not so much about the big banks, which the Federal Reserve and other central banks would rescue, but the so-called nonbank banks, such as large brokerage houses, retailers and credit card companies. Without a responsible "lender of last resort" to support such institutions, Mr. Cleveland warned that widespread failures of nonbank banks could cause a severe contraction of the money and credit system.

'A recession is coming,' a leading economist said. Logically, there is no way out,'

The globalization of financial markets and the speed with which funds can be pulled out of one market after another increase the risks of a systemic breakdown. And exchange-rate instability is an immediate worry for Europeans and Americans alike Participants at the conference on the Marshall Plan in retrospect, sponsored by the Bologna Center of Johns Hopkins University, were confused over whether the United States intends to defend the dollar or not.

A singgestion by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d that the United States was prepared to let the dollar fall rather than risk a recession by tightening money provoked anxiety that Washington is putting domestic politics ahead of monetary stability.

Some economists argued that dollar devaluation was incapable of solving the U.S. trade deficit. Professor Jan Kregel of the Bologna Center said that in the absence of more fundamental measures, there could be "no equilibrium rate for the dollar." The dollar's value will depend on rates of economic growth in Western Europe and the United States, rates of inflation, actions that may or may not be taken to narrow the U.S. budget deficit, and the low level of American savings relative to investment.

CTION by the United States to shrink its trade deficit will almost surely mean reductions in American living stan-dards, as consumption is reined in A reduction in the U.S. trade deficit also is likely to mean a loss of export sales for Europe and Japan, raising the chances of a recession.

"A recession is coming," Mr. Cleveland said. "Logically, there is no way out. It's necessary for a closing of the external deficit. What's ahead for us is a painful weakening of aggregate demand." The big question, he added, is whether a recession can be kept from getting out of hand.

Most of the conferees felt that the mistakes made at the start of the Great Depression could be avoided. After the 1929 stock crash, 1930 was a year of typical recession. The plunge into deep depression did not come until late 1931, brought on by restrictive fiscal and monetary policies, a worldwide spread of protectionism and a breakdown of the international banking system.

The common, although not universal, view in Bologna was that enough is now known about fiscal, monetary and trade policies to caused a resum Part come worry that the divisions among a course.

not enough will be done in time.

As in the postwar reconstruction era, when European economies were shattered and U.S. strength was overwhelming, a plan to rescue the world economic system is needed. Yet a solution to rescue the world economic system is needed. Yet a solution today, with vastly different circumstances, particularly a relative-ly weakened America, will require utterly different circumstances. ly weakened America, will require utterly different approaches

Can Steven Jobs Pull It Off This Time?

Apple's Founder Seeks Comeback With 'Next'-Generation Computer

By Andrew Pollack

New York Times Service SAN FRANCISCO — Gliding across the stage, a huge screen behind him. Steven P. Jobs has his audience of community college educators mesmerized. He is expounding on his vision of computerized education. In the future, Mr. Jobs says, sophisticated computer simulations will allow students to walk through Athens with Plato, experience life in 17th-century France or perform biochemistry experiments normally requiring a $5 mil-

Steve Jobs is on a quest again. Two years after being forced out of Apple Computer, the company he co-founded as a scruffy 21-year-old, he is preparing for his comeback.

In a few months, Next Inc., the company Mr. Jobs started with five devotees after leaving Apple, will introduce its first product, a high-powered computer for the college market.

Industry sources expect the machine to be introduced by March and to be shipped by summer, in time for the 1988-89 academic year. Prototypes have been completed, they say, and are being shown to a select few in universities and in the Few people, however, say Mr. Jobs, who is 32 and now wears European suits instead of blue jeans, is interested in selling only to educational institutions. His speeches have been sprinkled with references to the coming "fourth wave" in personal computers—the machine that will follow the Apple II, IBM PC and Macintosh. He leaves little doubt as to whose machine he thinks

Next's new machine is already the object of intense specula tion in the industry — in part, because of what it is said to be its dazzling sound and graphics capability. Even its color — black — will set it apart. "It'll make your jaw drop," Mr. Jobs

But much of the attention comes from a continuing public fascination with the man behind the computer. Next's success or failure could do much to enhance or destroy Mr. Jobs's reputation as a personal computer visionary, as someone who can successfully package advanced technology into products and spot the coming trends. The new product may also test his ability spot the coming trends. The new product may also test his ability to run a company, something he never really did at Apple. His reputation on that front is already under siege, in part because of two recent books that discuss in some detail his years at Apple. "Accidental Millionaire," by Lee Butcher, contends that Mr. Jobs was lucky, not talented. "Odyssey," by John Sculley, Apple's chairman and chief executive, is more charitable. - it credits Mr. Jobs with being charismatic and "ahead of his

But both books paint a picture of a man who almost destroyed Apple by ignoring the opinions of others, berating those around him and insinuating himself into every decision. Mr. Jobs has said he has not read the books, proclaiming, "I'd rather shape the Shaping the future will be difficult, though. Few entrepreneurs who make it big are able to strike gold again. Some flop the second time around because they try to outdo their former successes or are driven by ego rather than a good product idea. The product idea Mr. Jobs has chosen is a tough one. Over the The product idea Mr. Jobs has chosen is a tough one. Over the past few years, the education market has become highly competitive, with such giants as International Business Machines Corp., Digital Equipment Corp., Apple and Sun Microsystems making strong efforts. "Steve is not first this time," said Scott McNealy, president of Sun Microsystems.

Mr. Jobs has said little about what his new company will do, and he declined to be interviewed.

What he has said is that Next wants to build a powerful computer to be used in university instruction. It will have the power of an engineering workstation, which generally costs more

Accountants H.K. Trading

HONG KONG — The Stock Exchange of Hong Kong, which had the steepest one-day plunge last month of any share market in the world, said Friday that it had appointed an accounting firm to sharpen its market surveillance.

The exchange also said it was investigating the financial position of seven small brokerages. Robert Fell, the exchange's senior execu-tive, said trading by the seven had been suspended "pending the find-ings of Coopers & Lybrand," the accounting firm.

Mr. Fell said Thursday that three small brokers were in financial difficulties and that one was likely to be liquidated. He did not identify any of the troubled brokerages Fri-

He said the accountants would review the enforcement activities of the exchange's surveillance department. They also will take a close look at the department's proce-dures for surprise inspections and the filing of routine returns and audited accounts by members.

On Oct. 19, the stock exchange's Hang Seng index plunged 11 per-cent amid a sharp decline in share prices worldwide. Trading on Hong Kong's stock and futures exchanges was halted for four days, only to have the stock index plummet a record 33.3 percent to 2.241.69 when it reopened Oct. 26.

Rescue packages totaling 4 bil-lion Hong Kong dollars ($512 million) from the government and local and Chinese banks helped the futures exchange avert a collapse. The Hang Seng index closed Friday at 2.226.74, up 75.87 points from Thursday's close.

Midland, which bolstered its reserves for losses on troubled Third World loans by £916 million in July, applanded the move. The British bank's chamman, Sir

Kit McMahon, said that the investment by Hongkong Bank would allow Midland to "meet the pres-sures and opportunities of a rapidly changing financial environment."

Midland said meanwhile that it would add an additional £100 million to its reserves for problem loans. To finance its addition to debt reserves in July, it sold three bank subsidiaries and launched a £700 million rights issue.

The move by Hongkong & Shanghai, the British territory's largest commercial bank, is subject to approval by shareholders.

The purchase will enlarge Hong-kong Bank's stake in Midland from 0.2 percent and significantly expand its international presence.

European Airline Group May Buy Into United's Reservations System

NEW YORK — The chief executive of British Airways PLC said a group of European carriers was talking with Allegis Corp. about buying a minority stake in the reservation system of Allegis's United Airlines unit.

"We are writing for some more information." "We are waiting for some more information," the executive, Colin Marshall, said after a presentation to analysts. United's Apollo reservations system is already working with British Airways and a group of other European carriers to build a worldwide reservations system.

As part of its restructuring, Allegis is offering up to half of Covia, the unit that owns Apollo. So far, the group, which calls itself Galileo, includes BA, Alitalia, KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, Swissair, British Caledonian Airways, Austrian Airlines, TAP Air Portugal, Aer Lin-gus and Covia. But Galileo does not own any of

Mr. Marshall said Galileo's investment bank er, Morgan Stanley, was talking with First Bos-ton, the banker handling bids for Allegis's units during restructuring.

He said there was no time limit to make a bio for part of Covia and that the members of Galileo would bid jointly, "if we make one." Separately, Mr. Marshall said British Airways could make a new offer to acquire private ly held British Caledonian as soon as next week BA's acquisition of the smaller airline was ap-proved Wednesday by the British government. Once the merger is completed, about 2,000 jobs will be eliminated from the combined company, Mr. Marshall said, adding that pay scales for workers at the two companies were roughly at parity, adjusting for differences in work rules. British Airways employed an average of 39,500 in the year ended March 31, 1987. British Caledonian employment figures were not immediately available. The chief executive said air fares across the North Atlantic and from London to Europe were raised 3 percent to 5 percent for this winter to offset higher expenses, mostly from increased

As time slips by, the gap that Next is hoping to fill is narrowing; as the markets for engineering workstations and personal computers converge at a breathtaking pace. Workstations by Digital Equipment and Sun already cost less than $4,000. Meanwhile, personal computers like the Macintosh II and IBM PS/2 are gaining the power of workstations. ing the idea or product "brain-damaged." People learn to stand their ground, however, because of what employees have dubbed the "three times" theory: The second time Mr. Jobs considers the idea or product, the theory goes, he will like it better; the third time he will call it "insanely great." Only a few people have left Next. But many of the people Mr. Jobs tried to hire from the Macintosh group have not signed on. Some of the best have gone on to form Radius Inc., which is achieving great success making large screens and other peripherals for the Macin-

Still some close to the company say that both Mr. Jobs and his followers have mellowed. The people in their twenties who gladly worked 90 hours a week in the Macintosh group are now in their thirties, with families and children. Mr. Jobs apparently no longer be-lieves he alone knows what the customer wants, an attitude he was said to have had at Apple. Within a week of forming Next, Mr. Jobs and his team headed off to ask universities what they wanted in a new computer.

Next faces a number of challenges in the coming year. Many of its competitors can afford to give computers away to colleges, for example. Still, the education market is full of opportunities. Universities like to push the frontiers of technology and will buy a new, snazzy machine even if it is not backed by a huge marketing effort. They will also do much of the support of the machine themselves, working out bugs and even writing software.

Next hopes to capitalize on this by selling direct, perhaps to univer-sity bookstores. By bypassing retail markups, and by relying on the universities for support, the com-pany plans to sell its machines cheaply but profitably. It is expect-ed to start with the most renowned universities and rely largely on personal relationships to sell, keeping advertising to a minimum.

Since the company will have a tough time finding enough students who can afford the new machine, TOKYO — Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita approved the entry Friday of two consortiums, one of which includes Cable & Wireless PLC of Britain, into Japan's deregulated international telecommunications market.

Formal government licenses will be awarded within a mouth, officials said. Despite British and U.S. government pressure, Japan's Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications had balked at allowing two consortiums to compete with Kokusai Denshin Denwa Co., which had a monopoly on Japan's international phone service before the market was opened up to competition under a 1985 law.

One consortium, International Telecom Japan Inc., is made up entirely of Japanese companies. The other, International Digital Communications Planning, has 34 members, among them Cable & Wireless, Pacific Telesis International of the United States, and C. Itoh & Co. and other Japanese companies. Cable & Wireless holds a 16.8 percent stake in IDC.

The question of the license had triggered a dispute between Japan and Britain, with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher challenging Tokyo to demonstrate its commitment to opening its domestic market to foreign competition. Dollar Slips From Highs on Light Profit-Taking Compiled by Our Stuff From Desputches NEW YORK - The dollar closed barely changed Friday in New York after slipping in Europe, reflecting disappointment over the failure of White House and congressional negotiators to reach an accord in budget-cutting talks.

Many investors took profits after the dollar had been buoyed Thursday and early Friday on news that the U.S. trade deficit narrowed in September to $14.08 billion from $15.68 billion the previous month.

"The failure to make progress in the budget delicit talks brought the dollar down and should give us a lower opening for the currency on Monday," said Rory O'Donohoe, a foreign currency trader at United Irish Banks PLC.

"And we'll probably continue to have a marginally lower dollar unless by some chance we see signs that negotiators are considering

Porsche Plans Production Cuts

STUTTGART - Porsche AG, the luxury car maker, said Friday that it planned to cut production because of sales problems in the United States, its most important market.

The company said the recent stock market collapse had led to "caution among purchasers of luxury goods, especially on the American market." It also said price increases in the United States were planned for Dec. 1 but gave no details.

A spokesman said that Porsche had hoped to produce 48,000 cars in the business year ending July 1988 but that the total would now probably be closer to 40,000. In the 1986-87 year, production was about 50,000 and Porsche sold more than 60 percent of its cars in the

U.S. Is Likely to Cut 1988 Growth Forecast, Sprinkel Says

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON - The Reagan adminis tration's forecast for U.S. economic growth in 1988 is likely to be reduced by a full percentage point to 2.5 percent because of declines in armer and business spending after the October stock market plunge, according to Beryl W. Sprinkel, chairman of the presi-

goods and services,
The most recent GNP figures for this year showed the economy growing at an annual rate of 3.8 percent in the third quarter that ended in September.

For this year, the administration is forecasting 3.2 percent GNP growth, sharply higher than the 2.2 percent in 1986. However, the economy must grow by at least 2.1 percent in the current quarter to meet that target. Looking at next year, Mr. Sprinkel warned that a recession could not be ruled out.

"I think the growth-rate estimate will come enough to bring a recession? We're quite hopeful it will not, and we feel confident it will not," provided the government follows proper economic policies.

Mr. Sprinkel said he viewed the shrinking of the U.S. trade deficit to $14.08 billion in September with moderate optimism, but said there had not yet been a solid reversal in trade

He noted that with the dollar declining about 7 percent to 8 percent since the Oct. 19 stock market plunge, the prices of imported goods should continue to rise.

18th century

Reviewed by John Gross

TN the 18th century, agriculturalists began to A assert a new degree of control over nature, no-where more so than in Britain. One result was that in the course of the century the weight of ordinary English cattle and sheep at slaughter nearly dou-bled; another was the emergence by the century's end of prize stock breeding, with individual bulls and cows receiving awards, fetching unprecedented prices, and exciting enormous interest when they were put on show.

The distinguishing qualities of these herbivorous superstars were their size and weight, which were both prodigious. Not everyone was impressed: there were critics who complained that they were lumbering and grotesque, that they suffered from reproductive disorders and shortness of breath, that the overfat meat they yielded was barely edible. But until well into the Victorian age, sheer bulk continued to carry off prizes.

Scientific stock-breeding is the first of the separate topics that Harriet Ritvo considers in "The Animal Estate," a study of Victorian attitudes toward animals and the social assumptions that lay behind them. In a chapter with the made-to-order title "Barons of Beef," Ritvo argues that the true purpose of champion cattle was to affirm the ascendancy of their predominantly aristocratic owners. The display of prize animals, she writes, was "a pageant"; proprietors might make practical or patriotic claims for their beasts, but essentially they offered them as living proof that the traditional hierarchy of the English countryside was more secure than ever.

Such an interpretation wouldn't have come as a complete surprise at the time. Ritvo cites one early Victorian critic inveighing against noblemen who "can afford a fancy, whether it is the purchase of a Titian, or the production of a prize bullock," and she quotes a skit from Punch about an imaginary

Solution to Last Week's Puzzle

Dog shows, which began to flourish in the 1860s, provide Ritvo with a more complicated case of social assertion. The relative physical malleability of dogs permitted fanciers, who were mostly middleclass, to breed their own status symbols (and there were aristocratic owners who resented their presumption). At the same time, the poor man's dog was generally regarded by those above as no better than its owner.

In the final chapters of the book, Ritvo turns her attention to more exotic material. Starting from the fact that the original moving spirit behind the London Zoo was a notable empire builder, Stamford Raffles (the founder of Singapore), she suggests that the 200 itself can be best understood as a symbol of imperial domination. Big game hunting, too, is presented as above all an aspect of empire, and we are asked to see a parallel between the shift from wholesale to modified slaughter in the late 19th century (as stocks of wild animals became depleted) and the shift of emphasis in colonial rule from conquest to stewardship.

Ritvo is a historian of the "unmasking" school. for whom the past must never be taken on its own terms. Much of what she says is obviously true, and she musters a good deal of unfamiliar and often deeply interesting evidence. But she writes without warmth, and with her talk of "metonymic roles" and warmth, and with her talk of "metonymic roles" and "hegemonic discourse" she is far too ready to put the complicated experience of actual human beings through the mangle of a reductive jargon.

As a result, she repeatedly overstates her case. For example, she tells us that the guidebooks to 19th-century zoos were "inveterately linear, prescribing a single route through the exhibits, from the entrance to the refreshment stand." Nothing so very terrible about that, one might have thought: After all, people weren't positively compelled to save the refreshment stand till last. But Ritvo goes on to explain that the guidebooks' advice was all part of a "strategy of appropriation and control."

Since King Wooden, U.S. College Basketball Has Had Only Pretenders

By John Feinstein

WASHINGTON - Once upon a time, with the start of each U.S. college-basketball season, there was a No. 1 team: UCLA. And, almost as inevitably when the season ended, there was a No. 1 team: UCLA. Ten times in 12 years.

the final four once (1980), and has not gotten beyond the round of 32 since. No one has stepped forward to take the Bruins' place. Indiand, beginning with 1976, has won three national titles under Bob Knight — the most recent last March when Keith Smart broke Syracuse's heart with four seconds left in their game —but no one has dominated the way UCLA once did.

And, in all likelihood, it will be forever thus. Last season was a perfect example of what col-lege basketball has become, Indiana, the national champion, trailed in five of its six NCAA games and needed a loss by Purdue on the last day of championship. Syracuse, the runner-up, finished the regular season in a three-way tie for first in the Big East and lost the conference townsment. Providence, fourth best in the Big East during the regular season, reached the final four. Florida, and perhaps four if young players at Georgetown which had never before made the NCAA tournaand St. John's develop. The Atlantic Coast Conment, was one blocked shot away from the final

> Nothing is certain in college basketball, which is what makes it so much fun, the return of the short three-point shot notwithstanding The only new rule of significance this season is a crackdown on intentional fouling, particularly in the end-game. If the officials enforce the new rule - two shots, plus possession even if a shot goes in while the foul is occurring - it could cat down on late-game free-throw parades and tackling on breaksways.

again be the class of the independents. "November just doesn't mean anything, except maybe for the fans," said North Carolina State's coach, Jim Valvano, who has been to the final eight three of the last five years. "March is what the sport is all about. That and getting ready for March." Valvano's team proved that last season. After a 17-14 regular season, the Wolfpack saved itself from an awful year by winning the ACC tournament. This year, Val-even it has question marks, having lost its best three-point shooter. Greg Monroe, and its best defensive stopper, Howard Triche. Still, there is a basketball saying that the team that returns a good point guard and a good center only gets better. That description fits Jim Bocheim's team.

It does not fit Kansas, which lost both its point guards. Cedric Hunter and Mark Turgeon, but is loaded everywhere else, most notably with the return of Danny Manning, the 6coach, Larry Brown. "We asked him to do a lot last year, especially in terms of being a leader. He's not that kind of person by nature. But he's going to have to do that for us this year."

Last year Purdue was the team picked to reign in March, Instead, the Boilermakers collapsed. They were 24-3 going into the last game of the regular season with a chance to win the Rig Ten title outright at Michigan, only to be embarrassed by the Wolverines, 104-68, then blown out by Florida in the second round of the NCAA tournament. "I really don't have an answer for what happened," said the coach, Gene Keady. "The best thing about our team last year was that we were consistent. But when we needed to raise ourselves a level or two, we couldn't do it. I think this group may be able to do that though."

Four starters are back, including sweet-shooting Troy Lewis, power forward Todd Mitchell and underrated point guard Everette Stephens. But it has been a troubled preseason for the Boilermakers. Lewis broke a foot and, just when he returned, Mitchell had arthroscopic knee surgery. Both are back now, but senior center Jeff Arnold, the sixth man last year, is out until January because of academic troubles and was arrested during a loud party in Octo-ber. Not the tranquil fall a coach hopes for.

year to play," said the Tar Heels' coach, Dean Smith. "That should be enough," Adding to Smith's problems have been the persistent nose-bleed that kept him out of practice for four days and the murder-suicide involving the parents of starting center Scott Williams.

If Carolina does falter, Duke, Georgia Tech and North Carolina State all have the talent to win the ACC. The Blue Devils, who surprised everyone by winning 24 games and reaching the NCAA's final 16, return four starters and have a strong freshman class. Tech has the most highly touted freshman in the country in 6-7 swingman Dennis Scott, and perhaps the best pair of forwards in Tommy Hammonds and Duane Ferrell. State has four guards who can play, two seniors and two freshmen, and if Valvano can rein in talented center Charles Shackleford, the Wolfpack will be excellent.

Syracuse must be the Big East lavorite, especially with Pitt losing Goodson. The Panthers are still superb up front with Charles Smith and the nation's leading rebounder, Jerome Lane. If their coach, Paul Evans, can just get solid play from one-time walk-on Mike Cavanaugh or freshman Sean Miller, Pitt could be It, or something resembling it, in March.

Before the season, it appeared would be softer. But the Giants lost to four of those teams, escaping defeat only when the game with the Dolphins was canceled because of the players' strike. Now the Giants face three straight road games, at Philadelphia, New Orleans and Washington, all against teams good enough to beat them.

But he came to practice Thursday with a swollen knuckle on his right hand and the coach, Bill Walsh, said that it was "very doubtful" Montana would start Sunday. The Saints also lead the league in total defense. That aggressive defense matches up well against the 49ers, and the Saints' workmanlike offense leads the league in time of possession. Harrah's Reno Race & Sports Book had made the 49ers six-point favorites before Montana sprained his finger.

SPORTS BRIEFS N.Y. Suspends Trainer; Probe Goes On

NEW YORK (NYT) - Peter Ferriola's training license was suspended Thursday for 120 days by the New York State Racing and Wagering Board because three of his horses tested positive for Lasix after racing at Aqueduct last week.

The board said Ferriola's suspension would be reduced to 90 days if he did not appeal. Richard Corbisiero, chairman of the racing board, said the investigation was continuing, and that parimutuel records were being scrutinized. Other sources said the three horses were being further tested. Ferriola, who has denied any wrongdoing, said he trained the horses on Lasix but did not administer the drug within 48 hours of their races. Lasix, a diaretic prescribed to prevent hemorrhaging but widely thought to improve overall performance, usually passes out of a horse's system in 24 hours.

KAPALUA, Hawaii (Combined Dispatches) — Defending champion Andy Bean shot seven-under-par 65 Thursday for a two-round total of 131 and a three-stroke lead over Sandy Lyle of Scotland and Lanny Wadkins in the Kapalua International golf tournament.

Payne Stewart was fourth, at 136, with Ben Crenshaw and Ian Woosnam of Wales at 138. Lyle, the first-round leader, and Stewart shot 69. Wadkins carded 67, Crenshaw 66 and Woosnam 70.

In Gotemba, Japan, Craig Stadler shot 65 to go from 31st place to a seven-way tie for the halfway point lead of the Taiheiyo Club Masters tournament. Tom Watson and Bernhard Langer of West Germany were among a group of nine two strokes back.

For the Record

Tamara McKinney, the World Cup skier who was the best U.S. hope for an Alpine medal at the 1988 Winter Olympics, will be sidelined about six weeks with a hairline fracture of her lower left leg. Roger Mayweather of the United States, the fifth-ranked challenger, won the World Boxing Council junior welterweight title from Rene Arredondo of Mexico with a sixth round knockour in Los Angeles. (AP) Three Polish weightifiters on route to the world championships in Fredrikstad, Norway, were caught with 10,000 doses of anabolic steroids at a customs checkpoint, fined 2,000 kronor ($310) and deported. (UP!) Major league baseball's 1989 All-Star Game has been awarded to Anaheim Stadium, home park of the California Angels.

The former White House chief of staff Donald Regan, who, with a little help from Nancy Reagan, re-signed his job in the heat of the Iran-contra scandal, is now jumping into radio commentary. Regan, who had also been treasury secretary, has agreed to do weekday commentaries over the NBC Radio Network in a Washington-based series called "The Donald Regan Report," beginning Dec. 1.

Three scientists from the United States, Britain and South Africa received Friday the 1987 International Balzan Foundation prizes & recognition of their research. The awards, worth 250,000 Swiss francs (about $181,000) each, were presented to the psychologist Jerome Seymour Bruner, a professor at Harvard, the Oxford historian Sir Richard William Southern, and the anthopologist Platip V. An appeals court in Texas threw out the drug and gun convictions for which the rock singer David Crosby spent five months in prison. Crosby, who first gained fame with The Byrds and later with Crosby, Stills and Nash, was arrested April 12, 1982, at Cardi's night club in Dallas, where he was performing. A police officer who went to Cardi's to check for liquor law violations entered Crosby's dressing room, despite the protest of a security market collapse, but it "had to be in a cool city like San Francisco."

Shere Hite is a woman with an important message: Behind her alarming fig-ogize. Gregory had no right to make a ures, she says, lies "a huge ideological call like that, the publicist said; and Hite transformation," with women redefining herself was willing to write a letter of their lives and demanding more from apology.

But people aren't listening. Instead, they're focusing on the surprising statistics (84 percent of respondents to her questionnaire are not satisfied emotionally with their relationships; 95 percent report "emotional and psychological harassment" from their men: 98 percent desire more communication; just 13 percent of women married more than two years are "in love"). instead, they're saying that only unhappy women are likely to take the time to answer her 127 questions, and thus her sample is representative only of the dis-

Instead, they're talking about her own quirky behavior, like the time a couple of weeks ago when she reportedly slugged a limousine driver who called her "dear." The next day, she stormed off a television interview that attempted to confront her with the chauffeur.

Hite is always on guard against trivial-ization of her work. The book is an intricate philosophical discussion by thousands of women who are discussing their emotional lives," she says, "I guess it would be expecting too much to get the press to talk about philosophical issues."

Ask her to prove that an employee of hers really exists - an employee who has made phone calls and written letters to reporters on her behalf, but whom no one except Hite and her husband appears to have seen - and she throws you out of her apartment.

The plan was, "Women and Love" would be unveiled at an Oct. 5 press conference. Friendly academics would be on hand to salute Hite and her work, and she could present her conclusions in a controlled setting.

She didn't do that six years ago, with

"The Hite Report on Male Sexuality." "The debate never got off onto a good level in that book," she says, "probably because I didn't write out a press synopsis and all that stuff."

This time she did all that stuff. And she

Diana Gregory were surprised to learn from the story that Hite's original name was Shirley Diana Gregory. Whatever the story with Diana Greg-ory, public attention and criticism have focused on the statistics in "Women and Love," which is subtitled "A Cultural Revolution in Progress."

Through an exhaustive seven-year research project, Hite says, she has gathered her data for this, the third Hite Report. Seventy thousand copies are now in print. "Because I went for statistical representativeness," she says, her results could be replicated" on a much larger scale with no more than "a 10 percent range of variation" in the results.

If she had gotten back millions of completed questionnaires instead of 4,500, Hite says, the same percentages of wom-en would likely have answered the same way. "No sample is perfect," she says, but "I think it probably would be quite

This assertion of broader significance - that vast numbers of women are, indeed, "suffering a lot of pain in their love relationships with men" - is responsible for the book receiving such wide attention. As the "Women and Love" jacket puts it: This is a "startling revelation of how women in America today feel about respondents mirror the U.S. female population, Sullivan notes. "I've talked to her about that. She shouldn't say it quite that way. With this kind of a sample, the wisest thing to do is talk about the percentages in the sample, and wonder whether one can generalize."

Some methodologists, researchers and statisticians who have examined Hite's approach go further, and say her women don't represent much of anything. Hite says she sent out 100,000 questionnaires; 4,500 were returned. "So few people responded, it's not representative of any group, except the odd group who agreed to respond, says Donald Rubin, chairman of the Department of Statistics at Harvard University.

Hite said, in defending her statistics on a television talk show, that "the presidents of the American Psychological Association, the American Sociological Association have all said that my methodology is great."

"Good Lord," said Herbert Gans, ASA president and a sociology professor at Columbia University, when he heard of Hite's comment. He said he had received a copy of "Women and Love" from Hite the day the show aired, but hadn't read it. "I don't know what it is. I know it's about sex, and I've heard the methodology is dubious," Gans said. Hite's comment was, he added, "unprofessional, not Hite "does slip into" claims that her becoming of a social scientist, and a lie."

As for APA President Bonnie Strickland: "Scholars and scientists ask different questions and use different methods of inquiry. I think the book is very valuable, but as a professor of psychology I am not the best person to make a judg-ment about this particular type of methodology.

Hite has suggested that her critics haven't read her work, so they weren't making informed comments. So several methodology experts were asked by The Washington Post to look at "Women and They raise serious questions shout her data.

"If I'm going to talk about 'What is love?,' I can't just ask a handful of people," Hite said in an interview. "I have to ask a broad sample. To me, it's very important to measure different parts of the population, because there might be important differences."

Actually, the differences are minimal. Most women in Hite's study seem to feel the same way. Take one of her more controversial statistics: "70 percent of women married five years or more are having sex outside of their marriages." Here's the percentage breakdown by in-
